Professional Dossier 2026

Nikolai Kostyshev / Ashraellen

Artistic research · Literary work · Public archive

A concise professional overview for publishers, cultural institutions, grant programmes, research partners, and patrons.

Professional overview

Ashraellen is the working name of Nikolai Kostyshev, an independent writer and artistic researcher living in Poland. The project brings together literary prose, phenomenological observation, social satire, digital culture, public philosophical practice, video, sound, and a multilingual archive.

Ashraellen does not offer a system of help, spiritual instruction, or motivational doctrine. It creates forms of observation: novels, formulas, essays, images, videos, and public reflections through which readers and viewers can recognise structures already active within experience.

The current stage of the project requires twelve months of stabilised work: time for writing, systematisation, publication, translation, archive development, video and audio production, and the strengthening of the digital infrastructure already built around Ashraellen.com.

Core question

Where does interpretation end, and where does reality begin?

The project records the mechanisms through which the human being of the twenty-first century loses clarity, inner ground, and contact with reality: informational noise, digital speed, algorithmic pressure, fragmented attention, anxiety, self-deception, exhaustion, loss of meaning, and the replacement of presence by functioning.

Professional frames

Artistic research A practice-based inquiry where novels, essays, video, sound, images and public response function as instruments of observation. Artistic form is treated as a way of investigating experience, not as decoration around a thesis.	Open knowledge A multilingual public form of philosophical reflection outside closed academic or institutional spaces. The project creates accessible entry points without simplifying the original density of the work.
Digital society An observation of how digital speed, information noise, algorithmic pressure and fragmented attention affect meaning, identity, inner ground and contact with reality.	Independent digital archive A structured public archive preserving texts, books, observations, fragments and research directions outside the disappearing flow of social media platforms.

Method of observation

The method is phenomenological observation: careful tracking of structures of consciousness from within, without reducing them too quickly to external categories. A novel functions as a long optical instrument. Essays and formulas register moments of clarity. Video and social platforms test thought in live public response. Images address pre-conceptual structures of perception.

The universality of observation is tested not only by statistics, but by recognition: the moment when the reader encounters a description of their own experience where they did not expect to find it.

Selected works and fields

MONOLITH A trilogy of social fiction, dystopia and philosophical cyberpunk about control, memory, systems, and the transformation of human beings into material of surrounding structures. Volumes: BETON, SLUDGE, GAS.	BETON The first volume of MONOLITH: a philosophical dystopia about a world where stability becomes a prison and memory becomes editable material.
SLUDGE The second volume of MONOLITH: a work about the loss of form, coercion into complicity, and the gradual transformation of a person into material of the surrounding system.	GAS The third volume of MONOLITH, in development: continuation of the trilogy's investigation into control, system language, memory, and the collapse of meaning.
Error 404: God Not Found A multilingual cycle of philosophical-satirical novels about the Heavenly Chancellery and people who search for God through distorted forms of their own fear, pain, knowledge, faith, profession, or control. Book I, Why Me?, is a completed 22-chapter draft. Book II, On All Things His Will, is the planned next book.	The Book of Whinesis A satirical project about burnout, complaint, self-deception, digital salvation, the info-business, and the mechanics of immobility.
You Are Already Online A psychological techno-thriller about a person who begins to notice that reality responds not to events, but to the readiness to confirm them.	Formulas and mini-essays Short public forms of observation: one thought, one mechanism, one precise cut of experience. They connect the public field with larger literary forms.

Error 404: God Not Found - cycle formula

God is not "not found" because He does not exist. God is not found because the human being searches for Him as an object, address, authority, proof, justification, guarantee, or support service. The error is not in God. The error is in the mode of search.

Public platform

Ashraellen develops not as a single media channel, but as a system of public forms. Each form reveals the shared research field in its own register: direct philosophical reflection, satire, symbolic analysis, sound, everyday ritual, literary work, or an experimental archive of images.

Ashraellen - Spirit of the New Time The main philosophical-research channel: clarity, observation, discipline of mind, inner mechanisms of the human being, and work with interpretation and perception.	“Church” of Saint Whine A satirical-philosophical project about burnout, whining, self-deception, the info-business and digital fatigue.
Occultus Scriptorium A symbolic-cultural direction about hidden meanings of fairy tales, cartoons, films, myths and cultural plots.	Melodies & Sounds of Inner Peace A sound direction connected with inner peace, silence, attention and presence.
Sacred Taste A practical-poetic direction about cooking as meditation, attention, taste, ritual and return to simple actions.	Ordo Sacrunomiconis / Sacrunomicon An experimental symbolic branch working with imaginal forms, visual signs, invented tradition and archival aesthetics.

Multilingual structure

Ashraellen.com is structured in nine language versions: English, Russian, Belarusian, Polish, Ukrainian, Portuguese, Spanish, French, and German. Multilingual adaptation is treated not as mechanical translation, but as careful access to the original core of meaning.

Current stage and support need

The project is currently seeking twelve-month working support. Support is needed not for expansion for its own sake, but for the transition from fragmented work to a stable cycle:

- observation → text → publication → translation → public response → archive
- book preparation and editorial systematisation
- video, audio and multilingual publication
- development of the digital archive and public access points
- stable infrastructure for writing, editing, storage, backup and production

Technical infrastructure

The project has moved beyond simple text work. It includes video editing, multilingual voiceover, image preparation, processing of large archives, website development, digital publication of books, and work with several language versions. Equipment and subscriptions are not personal luxury in this context; they are working means of the project.

Expected outcomes

- a strengthened multilingual platform at Ashraellen.com
- a structured public archive of books, observations, formulas, fragments and sources
- prepared literary projects and electronic publications
- translated and adapted key materials
- new video, audio, subtitle and short-form materials
- a sustainable working cycle of observation, publication, translation, archiving and public feedback

Audience and public value

The audience receives access to precise, non-simplified forms of observation that help recognise mechanisms of anxiety, self-deception, loss of inner support and rupture with reality - without motivational rhetoric, ideological frames or ready-made recipes.

- short public formulas for quick recognition
- mini-essays for calm reflection
- fragments and large literary works for deep immersion
- video and audio materials for those who perceive thought better through voice and rhythm

Public response

Ashraellen's public work has already generated meaningful response across platforms. Individual videos have reached tens of thousands of views, and one video has exceeded 500,000 views. Some materials remain smaller and more experimental; the project values both broad reach and precise recognition.

Cooperation

The project is open to publishing cooperation, cultural programmes, residencies, grant support, institutional partnership and private patronage. A detailed budget, work schedule and project plan can be prepared according to the requirements of a specific programme, publisher, residency or institution.

Guiding principle

The aim is to make the work more accessible to enter, not easier to dilute. Support should help create clearer points of access, translations, publications and public formats while preserving the pressure, precision and density of the original research.
